What is a "bank call?"

FOUR times a year the State Superintendent of Banks unexpectedly calls upon Trust Companies and Banks for the balance sheet of a certain day. This "certain day" is generally three or four days previous to the day on which the call for statement is made.

The officers of the Trust Company or Bank are required to sign a very binding affidavit that the "bank call" statement made represents the true state of affairs. A summary of this statement must be published in one of several newspapers specified by the State Banking Department.

The Columbia Trust Company's statement usually appears in the New York Times.

BLAME LOCK-OUT ON SOCIALISTS

Cloak Manufacturers Issue Statement Justifying Action.

TRADE'S EXISTENCE AT STAKE, THEY SAY

Will Continue Fight to Keep Control of Industry from Union.

The Cloak, Suit and Skirt Manufacturers' Protective Association, now fighting thousands of striking workers in the needle trades, issued a statement yesterday explaining the association's side of the controversy. It pledges itself again to fight for the "right of discharge" and against the "closed shop." It condemns the growing tendency to socialistic philosophy among the needle workers and tries to show how consistently the association has tried during the last six years to maintain friendly relations with the employees. Without attacking Mayor Mitchell, the association attempts to prove that E. J. Wile, its chairman, did not refuse to meet the city's chief executive, but that the latter put obstacles in the way of such a meeting. The statement reads in part:

Unions Led by Socialists.
"The unions in the needle working trades are composed of, and led by, an element deeply imbued with socialistic philosophy. They have grafted upon this industry their theories and policies, and acknowledge that their goal is the domination and complete control of the shops of the employers, in absolute disregard of the principle of industrial efficiency. This association has consistently tried, with infinite patience, during the last six years to cooperate with the union in a sincere effort to maintain friendly relations, but continuous litigation, innumerable violations of the provisions of existing agreements, ever-increasing demands and constant agitation by the union have brought about a condition of anarchy in the industry—one that is intolerable and utterly demoralizing to the efficient conduct of business."

The statement then takes up the "recommendations of the Council of Conciliation," entered into last summer and supposed to last two years. It charges a breach of faith on the part of the union in not standing by the agreement in so far as the preferential union shop issue was concerned. The union, the association contends, started an agitation in favor of a strike even while the agreement was still in force, and the combination of the closed shop, with the restricted right of discharge and the mastery of the shop chairman, leads to the following conditions: Absolute nullification of the principle of

The Strike Threat.
"Just let the manufacturers wait until July, when our time comes, then we will call a strike that will break every manufacturer, unless they give in to everything that we demand of them."

The statement continues:
"The combination of the closed shop, with the restricted right of discharge and the mastery of the shop chairman, leads to the following conditions: Absolute nullification of the principle of

Honor Fund to Reward Widow of Policeman Who Died a Hero

Victim of Italian Row, Whom Comrades' Blood Failed to Save, Will Receive Place on High Roll—Detectives Press Hunt for Slayers.

A dark-haired little woman was weeping in a scantily furnished apartment at 722 Columbus Avenue yesterday afternoon, a telegram from Police Commissioner Woods clasped in her hands. It told her that the department grieved with her over the death of Patrolman Henry H. Schwarz, her husband, but at the same time gloried in his heroism.

Schwarz died early yesterday in Bellevue Hospital from two bullet wounds received while trying to arrest three Italians in a cellar at 196 First Avenue. A pint of blood transfused from the veins of Sergeant Alexander Knittel, his superior, failed to save him.

Three policemen, friends of her husband, entered, and Mrs. Schwarz turned to them.

"When will they bring him home?" she demanded. "I want him here—here, with me."

Five Years' Service Without Demerit.
"He would have won his honor medal, wouldn't he?" she asked a moment later. "He wanted it so. Only a few weeks ago he told me that next time the Honor Legion marched he'd be in the ranks. And now—his name will go on the Honor Roll, but what are Agnes and Harry going to do without their daddy? What am I going to do?"

"He tried hard to be a good policeman," she said, turning to conceal his emotion. "And we've had a hard fight—a hard fight. Sometimes I almost wanted to go back to plumbing so we could have enough money, but then he'd say 'No, I'll stick to the force.' And he's dead."

"Last night when I left him at the hospital he smiled at me and said he would see me to-day. I believe now that he knew even then that he was dying. But he wouldn't let me know. He was always trying to protect me."

"Five years he'd been on the force, and never a demerit. Even when I was sick, and again when he was worrying over an operation that I had to have, and when little Harry was run over by a truck, he kept right on with his work. Captain Sweeney told me that he'd never had a better man under him than Harry. That was always what industrial efficiency: decreased output; domination of the industry by the union; a complete shifting of control of the management of the shops from the employer to the union officials. "These conditions will inevitably force the manufacturers of cloaks and suits to remove their plants outside New York City, where they may produce their merchandise free from union domination."

"We therefore say that to submit to such an intolerable condition is inconceivable, and the 409 firms which compose the manufacturers' association have arisen to combat this pernicious movement, and are prepared to stand by the position taken by them for the preservation of their inherent rights and their commercial existence."

SEES NO RELIEF YET FOR CHILDREN

Dr. Bernstein Says Wire-Tapping Quiz Befogged Real Charities Issue.

EVILS IN ASYLUMS CRY FOR REMEDY

Education and Vocational Training Neglected, According to Investigator.

Dr. Ludwig B. Bernstein, one of the three investigators appointed by Charity Commissioner Kingsbury to report on the treatment of dependents in the asylums of the city, yesterday said that the wire-tapping controversy was befogging the original issue. He called attention again to the inhuman conditions he and the other investigators found in public homes for children and adults. Out of their report and the succeeding investigation by Commissioner Strong, he said, came the scandal which resulted in Father Farrell accusing city officials of listening to his telephone conversations with Monsignor Dunn, Dean Potter and others.

"After all," said Dr. Bernstein, at the Hebrew Sheltering Guardian Society, Pleasantville, N. Y., of which he is superintendent, "the wire-tapping affair is merely a side issue. Don't let it be the fact that horrible conditions exist in many of our institutions. We live in the twentieth century and not in the tenth. There are certain duties and responsibilities to our dependent children, our citizens of tomorrow, which we must observe, irrespective of wire-tapping or other side issues. If there is any attempt to drag the veil over existing conditions by a plea of wire-tapping let us toss it aside."

Education Disregarded.
"The committee of investigators was impressed with the fact that many of the institutions lacked the essentials of modern child-caring. The majority of the institutions did not dream of providing the most elementary kinds of recreation, the most elementary kinds of civic training. With very few exceptions they had made no adequate provision for vocational training. In a majority of the institutions the education of children ended with the seventh school year, no attempt being made to give any high school training. In many institutions the children were charged with the future prospects. In many institutions the girls were made servant girls. In other homes the ideal employment for boys was that of office or errand boy."

Admires Mayor's Courage.
"I could enumerate hundreds of such medieval methods. I found that in a great many asylums the personnel of those who came in touch with the children was very unsatisfactory. In one institution the janitor was the head supervisor of the children. In some homes servants were appointed to take charge of the girls' departments."

"We are not giving the children a square deal if we permit the real issue to be befogged. Commissioner Kingsbury has made history for himself and his administration will be epoch making in the development of child caring in America. He has fought for an honest treatment of our dependent children and adults. The construction work accomplished under his administration will not only benefit the 25,000 children at present in the city institutions, but will stimulate much better work for the 85,000 dependent and defenseless children in child-caring institutions all over the country."

"As for Mayor Mitchell I can say only one thing. Here is a man who won't let the issue be clouded. I admire him for his courage and his manly display of his co-religionists, dared to stand by his convictions."

NO CHILI INSULT, SAYS UNTERMYER

Denies That Officers of the Tennessee Were Discourteous to Hosts.

Samuel Untermyer at his home, Greystone, last night characterized the stories from Valparaiso that officers of the cruiser Tennessee were guilty of gross misconduct toward officers of the Chilean navy at Valparaiso as on a par with reports that Secretary McAdoo and members of the American commission were discourteous to the Peruvian government while at Callao. He said that both stories were without a particle of justification, and had been circulated for political effect.

Mr. Untermyer declared that the dinner at Valparaiso at which ice cream is alleged to have been rubbed on a Chilean officer's head took place before Mr. McAdoo and his party arrived in Valparaiso. The commission and their party journeyed from Buenos Ayres across the continent and the Tennessee was in port at Valparaiso several days before the commissioners reached Santiago.

After reaching the capital, Mr. Untermyer said he talked with numerous Chilean officials, and none of them referred to any misconduct on the part of the officers or crew of the Tennessee.

Navy men in New York agreed yesterday that publication of the charges against the Tennessee officers was politically inspired. For several reasons, they did not consider seriously the possibility that any of the charges might be true.

One thing that argues against their acceptance is that the cruiser is now at sea, and there is no chance for a denial. Another is the time that has elapsed without any reference to the alleged incident in department orders.

It was recalled that the Gridley of "fire when you're ready" fame had scarcely resumed his seat after that speech of his when he was ordered "Go!" when he got a wire ordering him back to his ship at once. And Chili was not so far away that a well grounded report of misconduct by a United States naval officer would take more than a month to reach Washington.

The United Export Bureau, from which the translation of "La Union" article appeared, apparently does business in a very quiet way. There is no mention of it in either city or telephone directory.

WAITE, IN TEARS, WARNS, 'DO RIGHT'

Slayer Breaks Down as He Sends Message from Cell to Young Men.

IS EAGER, EVEN ANXIOUS, TO DIE

"I Was Never Insane," Sobs Dentist, Telling How Greed Caused His Downfall.

Dr. Arthur Warren Waite yesterday in his cell in the Tombs broke down. Through the grilling days of the trial, and the weeks that preceded it, through the torture of the questions of alienists and the damning testimony of his own wife, Dr. Waite smiled.

Only yesterday, with the tragedy of the electric chair inevitably before him, did his sardonic smile give place to tears. And the words that flowed with the tears were not those of a maudlin sentimentalist nor of a braggart; it was the speech of a man who, risking much to gain more, had lost everything.

Trial Essentially Fair.
"I had a fair trial," he said. "That is, its essentials were absolutely fair. There were some things they tried to bring against me that were absolutely unnecessary. But, pshaw—what of that now? It is all over. They couldn't hurt me. No one can help me now. If they loosed all the bolts and doors in this prison and engaged a steamer to take me to Europe, I would not stir a step. I don't intend to cheat the electric chair of its rightful victim."

He would not talk of Mrs. Horton. "I don't want to say anything about her. It is of my wife I think," and he buried his face in his hands to hide the tears that trickled out between his fingers.

"Poor girl," he said, brokenly: "my poor wife. I would gladly die a thousand deaths if I could undo the wrong I have done her. It is for her alone that I feel the enormity of my crime. As soon as I knew that Mrs. Waite—Mrs. Waite that was—correcting himself apologetically, "wished to see me to the chair, I determined to put nothing in the way of accepting that punishment. I am not afraid to die. I know I deserve death if ever any man did, and I am ready—yes, anxious—to go."

Sends Message to Young Men.
In his talk, the first since his signed confession of the murder of his wife's parents, Waite told of the greed for money, the obsessive desire to possess the power that came with great wealth, which led him, one step after another, to the path that leads to the little green door.

And it was with the sincerity of one who sees a newly made grave yawning for him that he said: "Take this message from me to young men: Fear God and do right."

The young dentist was clad in a suit of blue. He was clean shaven and carefully groomed as any habitue of Palm Beach.

Requesting that whatever he might say be taken down accurately, Waite began to talk about his reading, and his construction be placed on his words that might lead the public to infer that he wanted sympathy or was feigning insanity.

"Aren't you afraid some spiritual reaction will mar your present peace of mind, between now and the time for you to die?" he was asked.

"No. I have made my expiate my sins. Since I decided to tell all—since I made that signed confession last March—I have told the truth. When I recovered from my attempt at suicide I was filled with a desire to go straight and take my punishment like a man. That feeling has never deserted me."

"Have Squared Myself."
"When my brother and father came to arrange for my counsel and for my defence I told them I wanted to go to trial. I was not afraid of a trial. I assured them that I would accept the inevitable, that my only defence would be the truth. I believe I have squared myself with my Maker. If you heard

SKEETERS THRIVE IN GARBAGE WAR

Give No Quarter—Contractor Views Foe on Island, Then Retreats.

The god of war has chosen a swampy sixty acres on Staten Island for his latest field. On this field, called by the natives "Lake's Island," and chosen as a site for the new garbage disposal plant, he has encamped some seventy detectives. Captain J. J. Turley's detachment of peace-enforcing coppers guard the opposite bank.

Three times yesterday did Edward P. Doyle, head of a stalwart band of insular vigilantes, motor to the field of battle. And three times did he quietly show the bluecoats his tail-lamp. All save the mosquitoes, who, as a sort of aerial band of Hessians, attack both friend and foe. Guarding the Freshkill ferry sits a sturdy detective. He wears a straw hat, a lavender silk shirt and an air of ennui. He is a taciturn Charon, and confides his remarks to telling people that they cannot come across.

In charge of the island, and commanding the seventy detectives, is Joseph J. Quinn, representing Gaffney, Gahagan & Van Etten, the garbage contractors. "We don't expect anything," said he, "but we are ready for everything." A number of the detectives, from a private agency, are armed.

More than half filled with water, the good ship "Doyle's Bathing Pavilion" rests at the wharf of the Richmond Brick Company. Police Boat No. 2, of the Staten Island fleet, guards her. She was scuttled on Sunday night, and the ten good men and true aboard her are out on bail of $250 each on a marine traffic blocking charge.

That feeling is running high is shown by the petition for the removal of Mayor Mitchell on the ground that he is protecting private property to the detriment of others, which is finding favor among Staten Islanders. And Doyle, though he has since his mid-night marine attack done no more than inspect the land, swears he will build his bungalow on the very spot picked for the garbage plant.

JUSTICE FINDS "BOMB" IS ONLY HIS OLD PIPE

Breaks In New One When "Death" Box Arrives.

Hackensack, N. J., May 30.—Justice Paul Purp was breaking in a new pipe in the kitchen of his home yesterday, when Mrs. George Gaether dashed in. Excitedly she deposited a small box on the table.

"It's a bomb!" she cried. The justice's trembling fingers removed the outer wrapper. To his alarm he found a skull and cross bones and the word "Death" on the box. For half an hour he soaked it in water and then cautiously approached the parcel.

"It's just like women to be afraid," he said, lifting an old pipe he had lost a few days ago. Who sent the "bomb" he does not know.
